'A Prince's Amour.

A double suicide, or a murder and suicide, Prince Rudolph of Austria,

So many rumors were circuisted at the time concerning the young girl that her mother, Baroness de Vetzera, resolved that the whole truth should be known, and to this end edited a story, which was put into the form of a volume, to vindicate her daughter, and fifty copies were printed. The Emperor learned of the intended publication, and orders were issued which caused So many rumors were circulated at the tion, and orders were issued which caused the seizure of the volumes. The manuscript apparently cannot be called into question An important feature, according to the mother's story, is the infamous part played in the tragedy by no less a personage than the niece of the Empress of Austria. This distinguished lady's actions are given with the fullest of detail, and the pamphlet accuses her of being not only the intermediary, but a blackmailer as well. Baroness Marie's last let-ters to her family are likewise made public, and a story is told how a fortune-teller was made to play a mysterious part in the trag-

Briefly summarized, and as told in the young girl's letters, the story is that Baroness Marie Vetzera, then 17 years old, fell in love at first sight with the Crown Prince, and that she frequently met him in the ordinary social way. Finally she intrusted her secret to Countess Larison, the Empress of Austria's niece, and this lady at once undertook to act as a go i stween, while taking advantage of her knowledge of the state of affairs to levy blackmall from the F. ince.

Larison was ready with some plausible tale. The facts of all this are given in great detail in the mother's pamphlet. At last the girl in the mother's pamphlet. At last the girl fled to Mayorling, by pre arrangement with the Prince, and a few hours later her death was known by the Emperor, but not by the mother, who in vain implored the Chief of Police and Count Tasfe, the Austrian Premier, to cause a search to be instituted for her daughter. The truth of the double suicide or murder and suicide is at last definitely established by this publication. The news of the death was broken to the mother by the Empress of Austria herself. ed by this publication. The news of the death

The pamphlet shows that the Prince's mind had long before been given to thoughts of suicide, but that Marie did her best to dissuade him from this For the first time is revealed the indignities offered to her dead body. How she was carried away in a sitting posture between her two uncles, even a coffin being denied her relatives when moving her; how her mother was persecuted and villified, how everything was done to lay the blame on the girl, forms a harrowing story; told by the mother. The alleged falsehoods circulated about her are exposed and the daughter's dying messages given.

Deserted at the Altar.

rett is a resident of that town. She is a member of St. John's congregation, is pretty and had many admirers. John Cadden, a well-known young business man of the town, seemed to have the inside track. He had a dangerous rival, however, in the person of John Leary, of Kingston. The town of Kingston is some twenty miles distant from Providence. This gave Cadden the advan-tage, as he could see Miss Barrett occener than his rival. Leary paid two visits a

Barrett received notice that she would be married on Thursday evening at the church. Everybody understood that young Leary was to be the lucky man. Leary and his best man arrived in Providence on Thursday at noon. They went to the hotel and made preparations for the wedding. Many of the would be groom's friends called and con-

At six o'clock Leary and his best man called at Miss Barrett's home. To his sur-prise and indignation he found his rival, Cadden, there dressed in a wedding suit and waiting for the bride, who was in the next room. Leary demanded an explanation. All Miss Barrett would say was that she had decided to marry Cadden. Leary declined to leave the house. The wedding party went out ahead of him and took carriages, when the indignation of the disappointed lover knew no bounds. He made all kinds of threats. When the bridal couple entered the church everybody was surprised. Instead of Leary, Oadden was

The affair has created a great deal of talk. Miss Barrett now says she never said she would marry Leary; but she might have told him as a joke to be on hand the day of the wedding. Leary says it was no joke, that all arrangements had been the day of the wedding. Leary says it was no joke, that all arrangements had been made for the marriage, he gave the lady valuable presents, and he himself was put to considerable expense in getting his wedding | quired:
